

Peach Twig Borer

Anarsia lineatella
Zeller

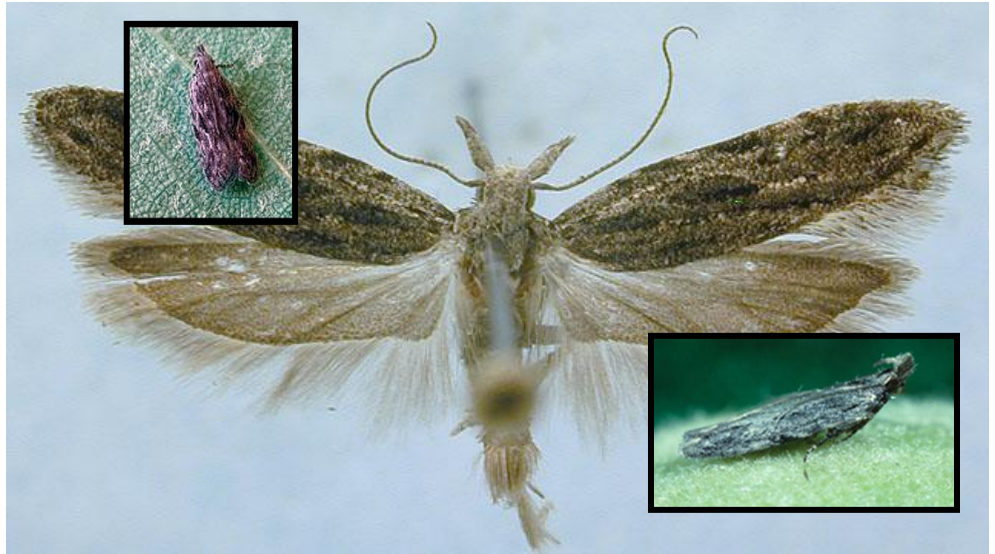

Peach Twig Borer can damage stone fruit – peach, apricot, nectarine, plum – and also almond by feeding in shoots and causing shoot strikes, or by feeding directly on the fruit. For population monitoring and as part of an effective IPM program you need to deploy AlphaScents™ Peach Twig Borer moth lures with any of these AlphaScents™ traps.

- Plastic Delta Trap, convenient multi-use, red or white
- Wing Trap, traditional
- Paper Delta Trap, single use, lowest cost in small quantities

Application

Best time and placement of monitoring traps varies seasonally.

Consult www.alphascents.com and your local county extension office for best practices.

Adult moths are 0.3 to 0.4 inches long. Note the prominent palpi on the head that looks like a snout. Eggs are yellowish to orange blunt ovals that are laid on twigs, leaves, and on the fruit.

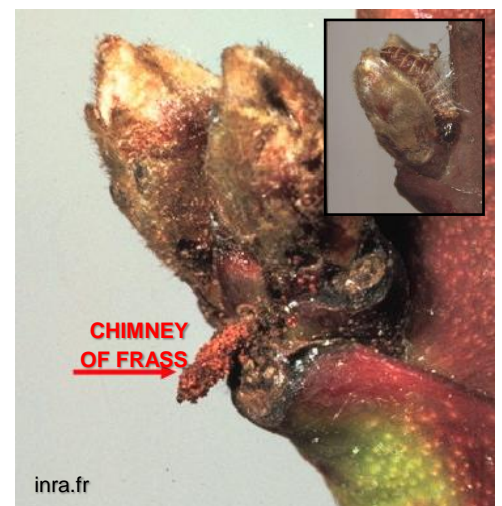

Above: Larva in peach twig. They are small with a black head. They emerge almost white, gradually turning chocolate brown with alternating light bands around the abdomen. This distinguishes them from other larvae found in stone fruits. Right: Alpha Scents Red Plastic Delta Trap with Peach Tree Borer Lure on peach tree in southern California

Shoot strike damage.

Larva entry point in hanging fruit. Inset: Larva creating internal damage.

Entry point at the base of a peach bud with characteristic chimney of frass. Inset: Larva weaving its cocoon along a bud.
